

And Beginning with Moses

Have you noticed a shift in our culture and struggle to know how to share the gospel with this new generation? You want to teach the Bible, but when people don't understand who God is, where do you begin?

Maybe you've seen a change in the Christian church as postmodernism begins to affect the way we think. Previous methods of evangelism seem to be falling flat and people are becoming more and more illiterate concerning the Bible. You know there's a problem but you can't pinpoint exactly what it is or how to solve it.

Don't you wish the problem could be identified? Even better, if there was already a solution? Just think how much more effective you could be in sharing the gospel if you knew what tools might help to correct the problem and even more so if you were taught how to use those tools!

This short, 114-page book takes a good look at the problems we face in communicating the gospel in today's culture. Not only does it identify the problem, but it also offers a biblical solution and gives an explanation of why this method works. Various tools have been created to help fill this need, each geared for a different audience. The second half of this book discusses what those tools are and explains how to use them. Also included is a section about common blunders made with these tools as well as ideas of how to use them effectively.
